PR-Z 161 - Chapel of San Jorge Route

7 kilometers away from the current Fayón, this place of popular devotion gathers in the same space a chapel, a centennial pine tree, a recreational area, and a pond. Starting from here, a cycling and hiking route through deep vales and forests in the direction of the Matarraña valley.

The scourge of the fire has also arrived here and its effects on the forest are evident. The route, after reaching the river, progresses along the adjacent valley to start the way back through the plains area where some of the most ancient farmhouses of the area are located, such as Les Roques, del Viudo, del Pövet, etc.

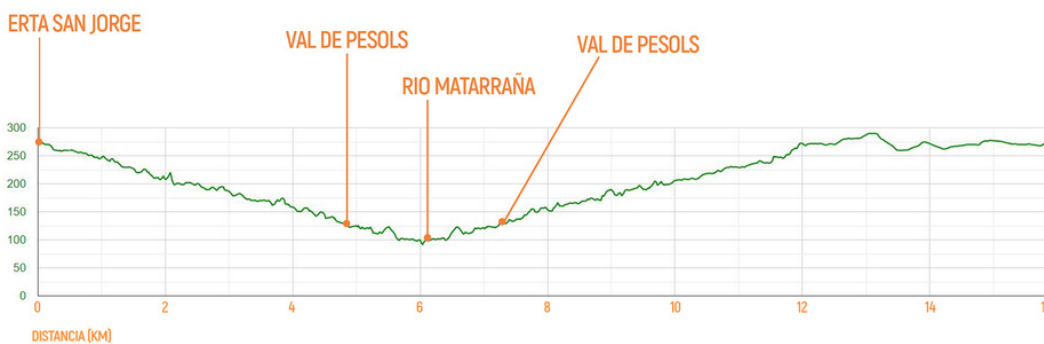

The route starts from the recreational area of the chapel of San Jorge, a place of devotion, located about 7 km from the current Fayón. It leaves behind it a centenary pine tree and descends the stairs that lead to a small pond, next to the picnic area. Here starts the itinerary that will follow deep and forested valleys towards the valley of the Matarraña.

A good track runs along the Vall de l'Assut/Matarraña, up to the crossing with the Barranc de la Dern, an area where the effects of the fire of the summer of 2009 are still visible. A little further on, the route becomes embedded in the profound valley until it reaches the crossroads. The track continues to the left for 1.3 km to the Matarraña river.

Once there it is possible to link with the route of the Lower Matarraña that runs along the right margin of the river between Nonaspe and Fayón. On the way back to this intersection, the PR-Z 161 goes up the ravine or Vall de Pesols, a beautiful wooded area dominated by Mediterranean pines and abundant scrub.

A fork to the right crosses the valley and begins to climb up to the agricultural plains, where we will find signs leading to the country houses in the area (Pövet, del Viudo, de les Roques, etc.). The route connects with the Camino Natural del Ebro, beginning the return to the chapel and starting point.
